Module Summary

This module reconsiders the 'beyond' of International Relations. After the end of the cold war it seemed that international relations, as traditionally understood by the discipline in terms of power politics, Realpolitik, had come to an end. The assumptions of state-based politics, which had informed classical IR, in turn came into question. IR was understood as a discipline founded upon 'seeing like a state' (from the perspective of a very white, western elite) whereas there were many other, more pluralised, ways of seeing and thinking about politics. Thirty years into the opening up of the discipline of IR (to a global era), this module provides a chance to reflect upon the 'beyond' of the International. In the 1990s it seemed that this beyond offered a positive opportunity to think from non-state-based positions, from the universal view of global interests and concerns: to construct a liberal/globalised community, adding many more issues and concerns beyond traditional state security. In the 2000s it appeared that the beyond of the International, and the power, governance and knowledge assumptions that it relied upon, was not necessarily the globalising of liberal forms of rule or, if it was, this was no longer to be understood positively. In the deconstruction of the Global, universal, imaginary in the 2000s, the call within the discipline has not been for a return to the understandings of the past, but rather for a further problematisation of its assumptions: the rise of the Planetary.

In this module we analyse the new forms of thinking that have sought to grasp the world beyond the politics of the 'International': alternative ways of seeing and theorising the problems and assumptions of the political sphere. Of most importance, for this module, is that the beyond of IR is a set of discussions that do not see the world in terms of state-based theories of strategy and interests, therefore there is less attention to international theory. The starting assumption is not the state acting in the context of anarchy. Of course, we still have states and states are central to policy-making discourses and international practices, but dominant discussions and debates in IR increasingly focus more upon how we understand and see the world beyond the narrow assumptions which informed the discipline of International Relations.

The module is in three sections. Firstly, it considers IR from the vantage point of today, focusing on the establishment of the world of the international on the basis of what is seen now as a very narrow modernist or Eurocentric understanding – therefore we start with a rethinking of the two founding moments of IR as a liberal political discipline: 1492 and the construction of a 'one world world' and the liberal imaginary of the social contract, establishing the polity as separate from the 'state of nature'. The second section narrows our focus to the afterlife of IR, the Global or liberal turn of the 1990s and 2000s. The attempt to ground IR through a universal or global imaginary, is reflected upon through three lenses – human security, liberal internationalism and global governance – and their challenges by different modes of contemporary thinking. In the third section, the module considers the shift from the deconstruction and critique of the Global and towards a new positive and constructive paradigm of 'pluriversal', 'cosmopolitical' and 'planetary' perspectives, often associated with the planetary politics of the Anthropocene.

Module Aims

1. To introduce students to the theoretical frameworks and practices of the world beyond international relations, to the debates which it has triggered, and the way that approaches to the discipline of IR have developed in the post-cold war era.
2. The module considers the implications of the shift from an elite world of inter-state relations to a more socially complex world and how this shift has been theorised and understood in different ways (both positively and negatively).
3. The module analyses how the centrality of the state (both analytically and as a key institutional actor) has changed for international theorising. In this context, it particularly focuses on what might be termed 'neoliberal' or new institutionalist, critical and decolonial approaches, which place difference at the centre of international frameworks.
4. The module also introduces students to frameworks of complexity and posthumanism which suggest that international problems can neither be grasped in global nor international terms.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of this module students will be able to:

1. Analyse a range of specialised theories that can be applied to the study of international relations; both in terms of understanding the shift to the global and the limits of this shift.
2. Critically evaluate how state-based approaches to IR have been displaced and the impacts that this has had upon ways of thinking about the discipline.
3. Analyse the relevance of critical, institutionalist and decolonial understandings of the limits of the global imaginary.
4. Critically analyse the limits to traditional understandings of structure and agency in the international sphere and how these apply to climate change and contemporary issues of governance.
5. Select and apply specialised international theories and approaches to specific research problems and recognise the basic costs and benefits of those selections.

Teaching, Learning and Assessment

One 3 hour seminar per week involving small group work and student led-discussions. Students are expected to prepare in advance as this involves discussion/interpretation of key readings. The assessment for this module is one essay of 5,000 words. The essay questions are available on page 20 of this module guide. The deadline for the essay is 1.00pm Thursday 14 April 2022.

Seminar Programme/ Readings

Please use this module guide only for this semester's module information and readings (the reading list link on Blackboard is a little out of date so please use instead the 'Learning Resources' link).

You are required to read at the very least two articles from the 'Essential reading' before the seminar, but preferably all three of the short pieces, the additional readings are intended more for use in essay writing.

* Readings which are asterisked are available directly on the 'Learning Resources' section of Blackboard

-----Introduction-----

Seminar 1 (25 January)

Introduction: Beyond IR: The International, the Global and the Planetary and allocation of seminar presentations

The discipline of International Relations was shaped by discourses of Realism – based on a model of international anarchy in which states pursued the interests of realpolitik in the international sphere. This seminar introduces students to what happened after the weakening of this paradigm with the end of the cold war (please note that a grounding in IR theory is not essential for this module). We will introduce two major paradigms of thought, the global and the planetary, which have both challenged the dominance of the international. The global could be seen to be the apogee of the international, enabling a liberal or universal imaginary of development, rights and progress. The planetary challenges the liberal or universal imaginary and provides a very different perspective, potentially revealing how the global reproduces the hegemonic, colonial and destructive assumptions implicit in international relations as a discipline.

We will also allocate seminar topics, so please consider which you would like to introduce.

Questions

What is the discipline of IR? Do we need a 'beyond' to IR?

What is 'the global' the solution to?

What is 'the planetary' the solution to?

-----Part One: From the “World” to the Planet – The Human, Coloniality and Climate Change-----

Seminar 2 (1 February)

The Human: Development and the Anthropocene

In December 2020, the United Nations Development Project released its annual Human Development Report, The next frontier: Human development and the Anthropocene. This is the 30th annual report; the first, in 1990, marked the birth of the global, challenging the archetypal index of state-based international politics, GDP (Gross Domestic Product), suggesting instead that the index should be the universal one of human development. Thirty years on, it appears that there is something problematic with the shift from state-centred to human-centred global political concerns. The human is not, after all, a straightforward replacement for the state-centredness of the discipline of International Relations. It seems that there is something problematic with human capabilities, human agency and human values. The UN argues: “There is talk of returning to “normal,” as if some predetermined end date exists for the many crises gripping our societies and the planet, as if going back to normal is desirable or even possible. What or whose normal should that be? Lurching from crisis to crisis is one of the defining features of the present day, which has something to do with the “normalcy” of the past, a return to which would seemingly consign the future to endless crisis management, not to human development.” (p.4) This shift from the state, to the human, to the planet – each in its own terms seen as a radical overturning of the status quo - is at the core of this module.

Questions

What is the critique of state-centred ‘metrics’, such as GDP?

Should metrics of human development/ human rights/ human security be understood as universal or global?

What’s wrong with the goal of human capabilities, empowerment and agency?

Seminar 3 (8 February)

Race and the Coloniality of Power

This seminar discusses the 'beyond of IR' as established with the 'discovery' of the New World, which enabled the construction of the time and space of IR as a discipline – with the establishment of modernity on the basis of universal ideas of linear time and space and the modern state and human as subject. What we will later discuss as 'The One World World', the 'Coloniality of Being' or in Sylvia Wynter's terms 'the overrepresentation of Man'. Thus, in the work of Sylvia Wynter we are provided with an introduction to the necessity of a beyond of IR seen as the product of colonial power, not only in colonial practices of dispossession and enslavement but importantly as a regime of knowledge, as well as power, on the basis of a Eurocentric conception of time, space and the human as modern, secular and rational subject divided and governed on the geographic, cultural, temporal, economic and political grounds of race. We start with some of the work of Anibal Quijano which provides an introduction to the theme. For those of you interested in the more contemporary extension of these grounding assumptions, Anthony Pagden's work on the Eurocentric origins of governance and human rights might be useful as is Erroll Henderson's view of the racial underpinnings of IR.

Questions

What does Maldonado-Torres mean by the 'Coloniality of Power, Knowledge and Being'?

Why does Henderson say that the Social Contract is a racial contract?

What are the implications of Eurocentrism for the discipline of IR?

Seminar 4 (15 February)

The Human/ Nature Divide

Since the end of the cold war the disciplinary understanding of IR has been constantly adding new actors and concerns. This module seeks to raise a 'beyond' to this process, suggesting a more fundamental transformation in thinking and theorising is called for. For the last two weeks we have been considering the question of the 'Human' at the heart of the modernist or liberal canon itself. This week, we take an alternative angle into this problematic, considering how adding concerns of climate change begin to deconstruct the assumptions of the discipline further. The discipline of IR does not merely depend upon a construction of the Human that today appears questionable, the construction of Nature or 'the World' appears to be similarly controversial. Michel Serres' 'The Natural Contract' can be seen as an early treatise on the distinctiveness of 'the planetary': the view that political and international theory, in their focus on conflict, consigned the reality of the world to the background. The second, more contemporary reading is Latour's 'triangulation' of the international, the global and the planetary, summarising his 2018 book, Down to Earth.

Questions

What, according to Serres, is wrong with the Social Contract grounding of IR?
How, according to Latour, do the Earth, the Globe and the Land differ?
Near the end of his Millennium article (pp. 315-319) Bruno Latour raises 4 points on the distinctiveness of the 'planetary': 1) relation 2) scale 3) causality and 4) agency. Do you agree?

-----Part Two: Debating the Global-----

Seminar 5 (22 February)

'Top down' Critique: The Question of Power

Critical theorists welcomed the shift to the global in the 1990s, seeing this an opportunity for a radical decentring of state-based approaches to security. Of particular interest, in terms of this module, is how the agency of human security and the barriers to human security are constructed. These frameworks, which argue that the particular interests of states are a barrier to a universalist liberal approach to global rights and justice, will be contrasted with the Foucauldian critics who argue that the problems lie precisely in the pursuit of global liberal ends. The (broadly) Foucauldian critique takes on board the globalising of the international liberal order and opens up new approaches to critique in terms of liberal 'governmentality' and liberal 'biopolitics'. The biopolitical critique is pursued particularly in terms of security regimes, with good examples being the work of Giorgio Agamben, Michael Hardt and Antonio Negri, Achille Mbembe, Mick Dillon, Julian Reid and Mark Duffield.

Seminar 6 (8 March)

'Bottom Up' Critique: The Question of Epistemology/Knowledge

Neoliberal frameworks of understanding, informed by new institutionalist approaches, conceptualise the problems of democracy and markets as endogenous social and historical products. In this 'bottom-up' understanding, international policy interventions shifted from exporting 'one-size-fits-all' liberal universalist approaches of the global, to a much richer and more sociologically informed view of the contextual, cultural, social and historical preconditions for progress and to the social processes through which 'path-dependencies' and problematic forms of governance were reproduced. Particularly those of New Institutional Economics, of which World Bank adviser and Nobel Prize winner, Douglass North provides the key example. These new institutionalist approaches sought to explain how differences between states could increase despite a globalised context, which allegedly removed barriers between states and created an equal and universal playing field. New institutionalist approaches focus upon institutional frameworks, shaped by sociological and historical interactions. It is these frameworks, which are analysed as the socially constructed explanations for global differentiation. The emergence and the consequences of this approach will be examined in this seminar. For new institutionalist approaches, the world becomes increasingly differentiated and policy interventions, intended to universalise in a global world can unintentionally increase differentiations.

Questions

How do new institutionalist approaches explain the relationship between universalising or globalising forces and increased differentials in the world?

How does new institutionalism challenge rationalist assumptions of governance and juridical model of power?

How does Mark Usher's materialist approach draw out the logic of the 'bottom-up' approach?

Seminar 7 (15 March)

Planet Politics: The Question of Ontology/Being

Over the last two seminars we discussed ('top-down' and 'bottom-up') Foucauldian, biopolitical and governmentality critiques of the global, as an exercise of liberal hegemonic power and control, then neoliberal or neo-institutionalist critiques of the global imaginary as failing due to its linear, abstract and reductionist assumptions. This seminar could be seen as bringing both critiques together, where planetary imaginaries are seen to be conceptualised in a number of ways, which increasingly problematize and seek to move beyond the global. These ways will be considered in more detail in the next section of the module.

Questions

How do the authors of the Planet Politics Manifesto position it at the 'End of IR'?

How does Conway approach the claim that we should 'listen to what the planet is telling us'?

How does Rothe link different temporalities to different approaches to planet politics?

-----Part Three: After the Global-----

Seminar 8 (22 March)

Decoloniality and Pluriversal Politics

Decolonial scholars and advocates of alternative epistemologies argue that the discipline of IR does violence through its assumption that there is one world 'reality' and merely different cultures or ways of seeing this one world. It is argued that this approach to the 'Global' supports Western hegemonic assumptions of superiority, through the demeaning and exclusion of other ways of knowing and of doing politics internationally. This position questions the ontological assumption of one world-ism and therefore aligns itself with what is often called 'the ontological turn' in IR. The universal construction of the global is thereby understood as a colonizing move, the critical response being that of 'provincializing' or 'pluriversalizing' – reducing this perspective to one among many possible ways of engaging with the world.

Seminar 9 (29 March)

Critical and Experimental Black Studies: Afrofuturism and Afropessimism and essay preparation

Two important but very different approaches aligned to the Planetary, as a 'beyond' to International Relations' Eurocentric or modernist ontology - of a fixed linear grid of time and space – could be broadly termed Afrofuturism and Afropessimism. Afrofuturist studies emerged in the 1990s largely engaging with black futures as projected in black diasporic work in the arts, music and science-fiction. Mark Fisher argues: 'Afrofuturism has always done double work. First, it liberates futurism from the master narratives of white modernity... Second, Afrofuturism unravels any linear model of the future, disrupting the idea that the future will be a simple supersession of the past. Time in Afrofuturism is plastic, stretchable and prophetic.' Du Bois' short story 'The Comet' highlights that the use of science fiction to challenge our understandings of the present has a long tradition. Afropessimism is more directly political and philosophical. Denise Ferreira da Silva argues that we need the 'kind of thinking that does not reproduce the methodological and ontological grounds of the modern subject, namely linear temporality and spatial separation. Because it violates these framings of time and space, nonlocality allows us to imagine sociality, in such a way that attending to difference does not presuppose separability, determinacy, and sequentiality, the three ontological pillars that sustain modern thought.' She goes further in 'Toward a Black Feminist Poethics', to 'demand a decolonization, that is the unknowing and undoing of the World'.

Questions

For Afrofuturist and Afropessimist thinkers, space-time - the ontological grounds of the modern subject, linear temporality and spatial separation - is the problem. Why?

What is the benefit of speculative thinking for International Relations?

How do today's readings relate to our discussion of Bruno Latour's 4 points about the 'planetary' in the Millennium article (seminar 4): 1) relation 2) scale 3) causality and 4) agency?

Seminar 10 (5 April)

The Anthropocene

The shift to 'after the Global' was already perhaps pre-empted in the last two seminars on the rise of pluriversal thinking and the discussion around 'the ontological turn'. Here, thinking that remains stuck in the universal knowledge assumptions of both the construction and deconstruction of 'the Global' is inevitably problematic. However, while the challenge posed to the Global is clear, discussion about the Anthropocene remains very open at present. As Delf Rothe examines, two popular approaches in IR discourses are OOO (object-oriented) approaches which question the importance of the level of appearances and draw out future-oriented potentials and that of ANT (actor networks) which stress the contingency of the present or actual through the importance of networks of relations. Madeleine Fagan and Audra Mitchell in their European Journal of International Relations pieces from 2016 and 2017 pose fundamental questions to the discipline in terms of its securitising and knowledge assumptions. While Axelle Karera suggests that shifting to planetary discourses does not enable IR to escape its disciplinary origins.

Questions

How does the Anthropocene go beyond the deconstruction/critique of the global?
How does the Anthropocene challenge the disciplinary assumptions of IR?
How can concerns about security be understood in the Anthropocene?

-----Conclusion-----

Seminar 11 (7 April)

Conclusion: The Rise and Fall of the Global

In the concluding session we will address any final concerns with regard to the essay assignment and also revisit the (slightly adapted) questions that we asked in the introductory seminar.

Questions

What are the differences and similarities between the International and the Planetary? Is the beyond of IR that different?

Is the world more full or emptier today for IR scholars?

What is the difference between Planetary and Global politics?

Essay Assessment

5,000 word Essay Deadline 1.00pm Thursday 14 April 2022

Choose one of the following six essay titles:

1. What are the key differences between the 'International', the 'Global' and the 'Planetary'? Why are these important?
2. What is the 'Coloniality of Being'? How can alternative approaches to IR overcome this?
3. How do new institutionalist approaches help shift understandings from the global to the planetary?
4. What is the Human/ Nature divide and why is it important for discussions of IR?
5. How do decolonial or pluriversal approaches problematise the 'One World World'?
6. How might the Anthropocene transform IR as a discipline?

Assessment Rationale

The assessment regime is designed to encourage research expertise in the area of the 'beyond' of International Relations. It aims to develop advanced understanding of the concepts, frameworks and approaches which challenge and seek to go beyond modernist, liberal or universal conceptions of the international. The assessment by essay enables students to develop a critical understanding and to apply key theoretical accounts to current debates and problems with regard to the impact of these approaches.

The research essay allows students to develop an extended analysis of key concepts, theories and/or policies, to engage in an in-depth evaluation of competing interpretations and theoretical approaches, and to explore the application of these understandings both domestically and internationally. The essay challenges students to critically engage with their chosen topic and demonstrate their critical and analytical ability.

Further Information Regarding Coursework

In addition to the information contained in this Handbook, which is specific to the assessment for this module, you need to be aware of PIR's general guidance and policies for coursework submission. The most up-to-date information is contained in the current version of the PIR Course Handbook, and includes guidance on:

- Submitting your work
- Late submission
- Plagiarism and referencing
- Mitigating circumstances
- Word limits

The current version of the PIR Course Handbook can be found on the Politics and International Relations Blackboard site.

Other important sources of information. For information about academic progression, condoned credits, referral opportunities and the calculation of degree awards, see the Handbook of Academic Regulations (section 17). As these are the overarching regulations at Westminster, they are very detailed and quite technical. If you need help interpreting the regulations, please email your Course Leader.
